Hi Kate

It is for 2x R-49V. Unfortunately we do not have a suitable sensor for line 2.

Thank you

Dear Ryan
Many thanks for your support,
I would purchase the following:

- 1. R-49V - part no. 0110049 QTY = 2
- 2. oxygen sensor for hamilton ventilator type : C1 C2, C3,C6,T1,MR1 QTY 2

Those items are samples for evaluation, as I will handle their costs.

Hi Jumah

Ventilators do not normally require a matched pair of sensors, this is something that would normally be used in incubators where they are using two sensors that have to have nearly the same output.

If your customers are confident they require the R-22MEDV, then you can still purchase these as a single sensor:

R-22MEDV - part no. for single pieces 0110021 = USD $37.75 each EXW

If you are supplying the sensors for use in incubators, then you should consider the R-22Vi Matched pair, these have been specifically designed for use in incubators:

R-22Vi - 0110072 = USD 75.50 / pack of 2 sensors EXW

I am sorry to add more confusion, but if you need the sensors for the Hamilton ventilators you listed (G5/S1,GALileo,raphael), then I would recommend the following sensor:

R-49V - part no. 0110049 = USD $37.75 each EXW

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best regards
Ryan

Hi Jumah

The R-22MEDV - 0110021 is the exact same sensor as what is supplied in the pack of 2 (0110071), but they are no longer supplied as a matched pair.

If they need to be matched to each other, then it would not be useful to try them, as one pair may work and another may not. If you can give me the details of the product they are going to be working in, then I can check if they need to be matched for you?

Hi Jumah

Just to clarify, you need samples of the new model: R-22Vi?

Do they definitely need them as a matched pair?

Please can you let me know which equipment the sensors are to be used with?
